Awards and Recognition

Although the COVID-19 pandemic has affected the whole world, our School of Public Health has shown resilience and an extraordinary achievement for a small school.

Deanna’s interests lie in wanting to become a public health practitioner in community settings and her work is focused on the practical and social aspects of health care delivery. Deanna believes that health care delivery should be more inclusive and accessible to underserved populations.

Nicole’s dissertation will be part of Dr. Anderson’s most recent research on underrepresented populations in San Diego County.

Joint Doctoral Student Works on AFRICAN WOMEN’S DIETS

Joint doctorate student Atika Elbouchikhi’s dissertation on food choices of African American women in San Diego County reflects a growing concern among health professionals about the nutritional needs of this population.

“Girls Invest” is a mobile-technology-based intervention study to optimize healthful eating in adolescent girls.
